

Name: Bruce Neubauer

Storyboard: "Throwing" a Short-story Character

Text	Images/Video	Audio/Text
[TITLE SLIDE] "Throwing" a Short-story Character	none	none
Visual fade transition from title slide to instructor speaking.
(Available captions)	"Talking head"	Class, you may be wondering about the relevance of my assignment to write a short story about a public administrator. The cases we study in our textbook are real cases about real people. I want each of you to write a fictional story about a real person because being a successful public administrator involves understanding yourself and others. When you meet someone you first see them as they appear in the world. You can only guess who they are inside -- their feelings, values, motives, and beliefs. By designing a character for a short story you shape your perception of your character both from outside-in and from inside-out. "Throwing" a clay pot can be a metaphor for learning to understand people or designing a fictional character. Watch now as this craftsman throws a clay pot.
Visual fade transition from instructor to video of professional Swedish potter at work.
	Video segment of Swedish potter. https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-D9Li_U3RJY	silence
Visual fade transition from video back to instructor.
(Available captions)	"Talking head"	Notice that although this potter is working commercially it takes time to shape each pot. Each pot is shaped both from the outside in and from

		the inside out. Unlike the pots made in a factory, people differ from one another both in real life and in stories. Build your characters for this assignment thoughtfully, just as you will observe carefully to understand other people in your career. Your insights can help you become a better colleague and a more successful public administrator.
Visual fade transition from instructor to closing credits.
[CREDITS] Credits	none	"ukuelig" Wallakra Stoneware Pottery, Sweden, July 2011 Published on YouTube at https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-D9Li_U3RJY License: Creative Commons Attribution (reuse allowed) Speaker: Professor Bruce Neubauer of Albany State University